

Charlotte Pope is the Youth Justice Policy Associate at the Children's Defense Fund - New York, where she previously worked as a Policy Research Consultant. Before joining CDF-NY, Charlotte conducted education research with the Penn Child Research Center and the Research Alliance for New York City Schools, and served as a journalist for the Philadelphia public education newspaper, the Notebook, where she largely covered activist efforts to resist the mass school closings of 2013. She has interned with the Center for Constitutional Rights, Project NIA, and the Dignity in Schools Campaign - New York. She holds a BA from the University of Pennsylvania, and is an EdM candidate at Teachers College, Columbia University.